

5 March 2009

Aims: / Objectives:

Teenage Health

To explore teenage health issues through theatre

Comments / Feedback

Good presentation and format. A chance to reflect on attitude of both patient and doctor. Very friendly actors. Might have been worthwhile to get one consultation between a real doctor and teenager.

Great role plays. Good to hear student's views on different topics. Fascinating to see how the students portrayed the doctor during the consultations.

Generally very useful insight into the views and needs of a teenager. I was surprised by their medical knowledge and that their views are similar to that of anyone. Thanks.

Very engaged in presenting. Good feedback to the groups. Eager to participate in group work. Excellent role plays! - a wide range of problems which was interesting to see from a teenagers prospective. Useful to chat to them after to see what the important issues are at the moment.

Very interesting. Nice to get idea of how teens view GP's.

Excellent afternoon, the role plays were very informative and I appreciate how honest and open the students were. I learnt what teenagers like and do not like from a doctor and will use this knowledge in my future consultations

A good fun session, enjoyed the interactions and getting teenage perspective on some issues, including how doctors are perceived and how we should relate.

Very useful insight into what teenagers would like from their doctor. Good insight into how teenagers portray a doctor.

Thank you to the students - very brave to do role plays in front of a room full of doctors. Good illustration of how not to communicate with teenagers. Really useful to see how teenagers portray doctors.

Excellent role plays highlighting important aspects of teenage health. It gave a useful perspective - particularly of how GP's consult. In small groups good input from teenagers who gave us more insight into their ideas of the medical problems. It was nice to show them that doctors are human to.

Useful session. I thought the teenagers were very brave to come and face all of us. Their ideas about doctors were somewhat stereotyped, so I hope we changed their opinions.

Very useful afternoon - nice to know what teenagers expect from a doctor. Good to see teenagers view of what a doctor should be like.

Excellent dramatic representations of various types of consultations. Open honest portrayals of what teenagers want from the doctor and what they don't want.

Excellent role plays - very talented. Refreshing to be so open and honest. Interesting that everyone had different ideas/opinions. Worth recognizing that this group of teenagers are a group and other less educated/different class teenagers may have different issues/opinions. Very beneficial. Excellent actors. Really useful to have a teenager perspective on GP issues.

Would be excellent to have more small group work or feedback to allow GP's and students to interact.

Enjoyed it very much - impressed with the level of insight shown by the students.